

Delivery time for 1standard power scale custom outdoor cabinetss at port terminals

Why is port shipping billed by the hour?

Port shipping is notorious for delays. From vessels delayed by unpredictable weather conditions at sea, to labor disputes with port employees, to unavoidable customs delays, there are many moving pieces that can cause delays. Unlike most transport services, which are billed by the mile, port pickups are often billed by the hour.

What are the requirements for arranging pickups/drop-offs at a port?

Here are some of the most common requirements you'll want to be aware of when arranging pickups/drop-offs at any port. A TWIC, or Transportation Worker Identification Credential, is required for everyone who works for or at a port.

Do trucks need to be inspected before entering a port?

Some ports have environmental initiatives that regulate emissions, the age of each truck/engine entering it and other factors. All trucks entering these locations will need to complete the required inspection and certification and register with the port authority before entering the premises.
